

Weekly Update 11.27.19

This week's update is about some of the connections between our current building and the new construction. Even with the help of the pictures below, you may need to use your imagination a bit. The first picture was taken from the foyer of the current sanctuary. There will be an opening here into the corridor that will lead to the small sanctuary.

The picture below is the same location, but from the outside. This wall is the outside wall of the corridor, and the current outside wall (that goes along the North Wing) will now be an interior wall. That's some creative design work, don't you think?

Lastly, here's a view that shows how that corridor comes around to lead to the small sanctuary. Take a good last look at the white wall you see next to the four vertical windows. The construction workers are about to put a hole there to make another connection between our current space and the new space. Give the clergy and staff some extra love this week – it's going to be noisy!
