

Weekly Update 1.30.2020

Plenty of big machines on site this week!

The giant crane pictured above has been here this week, removing and replacing RTUs (rooftop units), condenser units, and AHUs (air handler units). Much of this work is related to much-needed, regular building maintenance that we purposely scheduled to happen during the building construction. As luck would have it, just before the work started on this, we had a few RTUs fail (as predicted, for they were at the end of their predicted lifespan), so this timing turned out to be perfect!

If you have been at the synagogue recently, you may have felt a bit chilly in the North or South wings. By the end of this week, that should be all fixed. The staff is learning how to manage the complex subtleties of the new thermostats, so please have patience if you're a little overly warm in the sanctuary during services!

As always, please reach out if you have any questions: bptf@templerodefshalom.org.
